

Written Notice of Allocation

The by-laws and articles of incorporation are a worker cooperative's core governing documents. They determine how power, money, and information flow through a firm, addressing things like how an employee becomes a worker-owner (also known as a member-owner) of the cooperative, and how profits are distributed.

The portion of the net income paid out to members is called the patronage dividend and can be paid out in cash or in "paper" to a member's internal capital account. This paper, or non-cash portion of the patronage dividend, is issued using a written notice of allocation, which is essentially a statement that tells the member the amount of the patronage dividend allocated to them but retained in the cooperative, and the current value of their internal capital account. Each co-op electing to be taxed under Subchapter T of the Internal Revenue Code, must issue a written notice of allocation each year. There are two types:

Qualified Notices of Allocation: A qualified written notice of allocation is a written notice of allocation that meets all the conditions of Subchapter T of the Internal Revenue Code. A written notice is usually considered "qualified" when the taxable portion of a patronage dividend is paid out in cash. The co-op does not pay corporate income tax on this portion of its income, and instead the member that receives the dividend pays income tax on the total value of the patronage—both the cash they receive and the amounts allocated to their internal capital account. With qualified notices, co-ops must pay out at least 20% of the patronage dividend in cash to members.

Non-Qualified Notices of Allocation: Co-ops can also issue non-qualified written notices of allocation, which are any written notice of allocation that fail to meet the conditions of Subchapter T of the Internal Revenue Code—typically the 20% cash payment component. In the year co-ops issue non-qualified notices they must pay corporate income tax, but can deduct the expense when the notice is redeemed for cash in a later year.
